Rich, rector of St. James Memorial Episcopal Church, at Tazewell, performed the ceremony, and Miss Besse Crockett played the wedding marches, accompanied by Mrs. George Smith, of Bluefield, W. They carried bouquets similar to those of the matrons of honor. Roy C. Thompson, of Bluefield, and Walter Kiser, of Tazewell, were ushers.

The bride wore a gown of heavy white satin trimmed in princess lace and pearls, and her only ornament was a diamond and pearl brooch, the groom's gift. Her veil of illusion was caught with sprays of orange blossoms and she wore a shower bouquet of bride roses and lilies of the valley. W. Henry White, of Buchanan, gave his sister away. Miss Hattie White was maid of honor, and W. T. Ham, of Norfolk, attended the groom as his best man. The maid of honor wore a costume of yellow satin draped in white chiffon and carried a bouquet of yellow roses. Miss Harman and Mr. Kiser, both first cousins of the bride, were flower girls and wore white lingerie frocks with yellow sashes.

The bridal party was entertained at dinner, given at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. G. W. Dock, in Tazewell, following the rehearsal on Tuesday evening, and were later guests at a reception given at the bride's home.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott left for a Northern trip and on their return will reside in Norfolk, where Mr. Scott is a member of the firm of W. T. Ham & Co., brokers.

STORY OF DIVORCE WILL BE SET AT REST

Crown Princess Sophie Is Returning to Home in Athens.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FOSTENOV.

GREECE IS RETURNING this week to Athens, after having been abroad since the spring, and this in itself will serve to set at rest the stories so widely printed in America to the effect that she had determined upon a divorce from her husband. It is true that they are not a very united couple, and that the Kaiser, and in England, the Crown Princess has led a very gay and frivolous life in Paris, where he aroused much criticism not only by his mode of life, but also by his readiness to accept invitations to dinner and to luncheon from members of the French aristocracy, and some very undesirable Americans, who would be looked upon with askance on this side of the Atlantic.

But while the crownprincess thus had his fling in Paris, he nevertheless avoided an open break and on the occasion of the crownprincess's birthday, last June, traveled half way across Europe to be with her on that day, at Friedrichshof, near Homburg, where she was staying with her sister, Princess Frederick Charles of Prussia.

It is perfectly true that the crownprincess does not like Athens. Nor is she popular there, in spite of all sorts of philanthropic institutions which she either founded or helped to develop and maintain. The fact of the matter is that she is too German to like the Greeks, who can never forget the fact that in their last war with Turkey all the sympathies of her German relatives from the Kaiser downward, as well as those of the German people were with Turkey, and that the Ottoman troops were not only trained, but even officered, by Germans.

The fact that the Greek army is being very successfully reorganized by a large delegation of French army officers, contributes to still further develop the anti-German sentiment in Athens, where the French officers have succeeded in making themselves very popular. The Greek navy is in the same way being reorganized by English navy officers, under the direction of Admiral Turrell, R. N., and with the existing strained relations between Great Britain and Germany, their presence at Athens must be regarded as another anti-Teuton factor there.

From this it will be seen that the position of the crownprincess in the land of her adoption is not altogether agreeable one, and the fact that she is very pronounced in her German views and tastes, and does not hesitate to show too freely her preference for things German over those of Greece, does not get on particularly well with her husband's family, and that she is not in touch with King George nor with her husband's brothers and their wives, and it will be seen that she has but little to attract her at Athens.

Owing to his having become stone-deaf, the Rev. Dr. Abraham Kuyper, the former Prime Minister of the Netherlands, and who has sometimes been described as the Dutch Gladstone, has been compelled to retire from public life. While he has undoubtedly been for many years a very commanding figure in the public life of Holland and a most important factor in its politics, his retirement will excite little or no regret, owing to his imperious and arbitrary character, just as impatient and intolerant of contradiction as that of England's Grand Old Man.

an hour in conversation with President McKinley. He was not impressive-looking and the American newspapers in describing him, alluded to the negligent character of his attire. In addition to being a Calvinist divine, and a pulpit orator of note, he was also being Professor of Theology at the university of that city; is the author of a monumental "Encyclopedia of Theology," and was for many years editor of the "Portland American newspaper—Der Standard." It was in the latter capacity that he acted as president of the Dutch Press Association in 1897.

If he was president, it was because he had usurped the office and no one, at any rate among his own party, ventured to protest against his assumption of superiority. Strictly speaking, Holland, like the United States, has no prince minister. Although the Secre-

State at Washington outranks his colleagues in the Cabinet, yet he has no authority over them, or power to interfere with the affairs of their department, such as is enjoyed by the members of most European cabinets. In Holland, no member of the cabinet outranks the others, the Council of Ministers being presided over by each of its members in turn, for the space of three months. During these three months the temporary president is the spokesman of the Cabinet, whenever it is necessary to speak for it as a body in the States General. The cabinet is an institution that is not in keeping with Dutch notions, and as soon as Dr. Kuyper's administration was overthrown, and the Liberals came into office, they reverted to the former practice, which had been in use ever since older times, when Holland was a republic. The same ideas prevail. Not only is there no prime minister, but strictly speaking there is not even a president of the republic, that is to say, in the American or French sense of the word. The presidency is vested in the seven members of the Federal Council, and its members take it in turn to act as president for the space of twelve months, neither the presiding officer for the time being, nor any other member of the Federal Council, having any authority over his colleagues.

Steps have been taken by the Italian government to secure the extradition of a Turin banker, who some months ago absconded with a large amount of property belonging to the late republic of Genoa, and who has since been deposited in his care for a number of years. The flight of the banker took place in the early part of the summer. But although steps were taken to quietly follow and shadow the fugitive, it was decided to refrain from any arrest, as long as the Duchess lived, since it is to be feared that the republic state of health, the discovery that she had been robbed by a man whom she had trusted so completely, would have been attended by fatal results. Queen Margherita, indeed, arranged financial matters so that her aged mother should be kept in ignorance, and has even undertaken to make out her own private account of the Duchess's will. But now that there is no longer any reason for concealment of the theft, its perpetrator is about to be brought to justice. (Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Company.)
